Does your student enjoy learning but have difficulties staying organized?

Are you concerned about managing the workload for high school?

If your child wants to get a step ahead and learn how to set goals, this course will help him or her. We discuss active listening, note-taking, and critical thinking. We cover how to apply these skills to a variety of subjects--from math to English--and how to stay organized using technology. This class is geared towards students who struggle with executive functioning skills and rising high schoolers who want to get a leg up. Students will complete self-assessment exercises about their learning styles, time management, and study habits to gauge how they learn best and where they may need to improve.

Middle School Study Skills

July 15th-19th or August 12th-16th

Geared for rising 6th, 7th, and 8th graders, this class will go over skills and strategies to help you succeed in middle school. We will give you tips for mastering math, including mnemonics (memory tools). We offer organizational skills to keep your schedule and backpack in order. Research and analytic papers are intimidating the first time a student has to write one, but following a specific structure and process can make writing much easier. Come learn the secrets to writing a great paper and studying effectively, so you can feel confident when you go back to school.
